WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

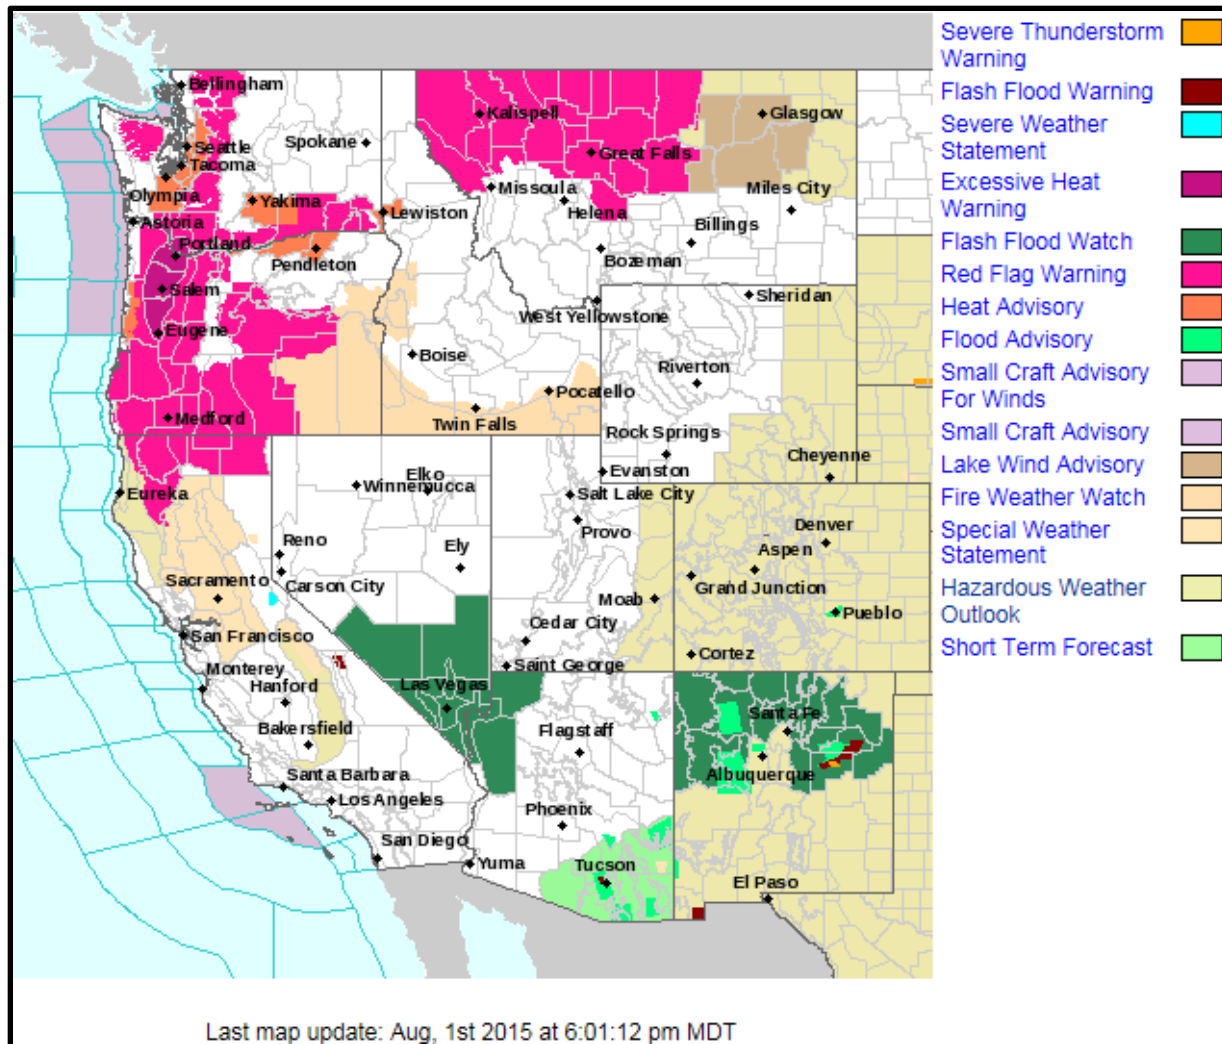

Northern Region

Thunderstorms produced over 400 lightning strikes in the North Ops area over the past 24 hours (ending early Saturday). Individual cells dropped only 0.20 inches or less in most cases. The offshore low pressure area will continue to pull moist unstable over the North Ops area today and Sunday. Scattered thunderstorms will continue today mainly over the higher terrain northeast of a line from Clear Lake to Placerville, with lesser chances over adjacent foothills and valleys. This activity may continue overnight tonight and through Sunday evening. Individual storms will be capable of producing 0.20-0.30 inches of rainfall today and 0.25-0.50 inches on Sunday. Outflow winds from storms may gust to 40 mph or more. A slight chance of thunderstorms will continue in far northern and eastern areas Monday through Wednesday as a low pressure trough remains in the area, but the majority of the North Ops area will see sunny and dry weather with near normal temperatures and light to moderate SW to W/Onshore flow. The latter part of the week will be warmer and drier with light winds.

Southern Region

Scattered afternoon showers and thunderstorms will form over the Sierra and over the deserts bordering Nevada and Arizona today as southeast flow aloft continues over these areas. The flow aloft will become southwest across the entire region Sunday causing afternoon showers and thunderstorms to become isolated and focused from the Sierra Crest eastward. All shower and thunderstorm activity will come to an end by Monday as it will be the second day in a row of southwest flow aloft. Temperatures will cool a couple of degrees this weekend as high pressure weakens and shifts to the southeast. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 15% and 30% away from the coastal areas. Temperatures will slowly warm and minimum humidity will drop mainly into the teens Monday through Wednesday as high pressure builds northward from Baja. Winds will be fairly light through the middle of next week. A weak area of low pressure will approach and move inland across Central California late next week bringing significant cooling to the region and a deep marine layer to the coastal areas. Isolated afternoon thunderstorms may be possible over the Sierra late next week.
